The OSU Slavic Center is pleased to announce that on Friday-Saturday, 7-8 October 2005 the Ohio State University will host an international multidisciplinary conference entitled “Post-Soviet In/Securities: Theory and Practice.”

Funded by the OSU Mershon Center with additional support from CSEES, the conference will feature scholars from the United States, Canada, Ukraine, and Russia, who will gather to present papers on a broad range of topics. These include the development of civil society in the post-Soviet space; Russia’s electoral politics and political economy; ethnonational politics in Muslim regions of the former Soviet Union; relations between Russia, Ukraine and Europe; and Russia and globalization. Among the conference presenters are Matthew Evangelista of Cornell University, Mark Kramer of Harvard University, Georgi Derluguian of Northwestern University, Ted Hopf of OSU, Henry Hale of Indiana University, and Vadim Volkov of European University—St. Petersburg.

The conference will be held in room 120 of the OSU Mershon Center at 1501 Neil Avenue on Friday from 9:15am to 5:45pm, and on Saturday from 9:15am to 5:30pm. For more information, contact the Mershon Center at 292-1681 or visit: www.mershon.ohio-state.edu/

The interdisciplinary conference “Translating Eastern Europe: Art, Identity, and Politics in Translated Literature” aims to bring literary translators into contact with scholars from a variety of fields, such as linguistics, literary studies, area studies, history, and political science, in order to explore the role translated literature has played and can play in the evolution of literary traditions and national identities in Eastern Europe and Russia.

The conference will also examine the influence of translated literature on the ways in which the West has imagined the “other” Europe. The conference will direct special attention to the political and cultural contexts that have shaped the selection, translation, and reception of translated literature both in and from Russia and Eastern Europe. Moreover, “Translating Eastern Europe” seeks to challenge the lingering euro-centrism of dominant models and assumptions in the field of Translation Studies, not from the “outside”, but from the “margins” of European culture. Some of the topics that will be explored during the conference include: translation and censorship, translation...
Welcome back! The Slavic Center invites you to its Beginning-of-the-Year Reception on October 7. It is a good opportunity to meet professors from various departments, new and returning graduate students and to have some time to socialize before the quarter starts making its usual demands from all of us.

And this quarter we all expect to be rather busy. The Slavic Center is preparing a new Title VI grant application. This time the stakes are high: we are asking for the Center and FLAS support for four years, 2006-2010. Our former grants previously involved three years of support. In the grant competition we are facing some of the best schools in the country, which have extensive Slavic programs and powerful, well-endowed Slavic centers. OSU has traditionally managed to maintain grant support, but we are very much inviting your help and assistance in designing a four-year program of Slavic activities that once again merits a Title VI grant.

Our summer was marked by a number of Slavic programs. Three different programs were held in Russia alone: an eight-week language program in Tomsk, and a two-week program on Russian Culture held in Moscow and Petersburg, as well as the first ever program on “Russian Opera and National Identity.” In addition, OSU held a Social Work program in Krakow, a Czech language program in Olomouc and an archeology program in Hungary. On the research side, several Ohio faculty members and graduate students took part in the 7th World Congress of the Intl. Council for Central and East European Studies held in Berlin.

For the coming quarter, I wanted to highlight three very interesting conferences, which will be held on campus. The first one is the conference on “Translating Eastern Europe: Art Identity and Politics in Translated Literature,” which also includes a translation workshop. We are organizing this conference together with Kent State University and thus hope to create a precedent for future conferences to be held in cooperation with other Ohio schools. The second conference, held at the Mershon Center and organized by Ted Hopf from Political Science, brings together some leading US scholars and several speakers from Russia and Ukraine, who will address issues concerning “Post-Soviet In/Securities: Theory and Practice.” And again in October, we will host a third conference, this one organized by the newly formed Association for the Eastern Christianity and Culture. October will be completed by a K-12 outreach activity in the shape of a day-long workshop for teachers on “Teaching Russian Culture,” which we will hold at the Kuhn Honors and Scholars House. And throughout the quarter, we will be running a South Slavic Film Series, showing some interesting recent films which enjoyed international acclaim.

With the opening of the 05-06 school year, the Center would also like to welcome our new graduate students. Those students are: David Radcliff from OSU, Katherine Scodova from Oberlin, Terry Studer from Defiance College, Allison Szabo from the University of Pittsburgh, Amy Szabo from Oklahoma State (the Szabo “twins” are unrelated), and Nathan Weller from Otterbein College. We are wishing them a very positive and professionally rewarding experience at OSU!

CSEES to Sponsor K-12 workshop on “Teaching Russian Culture”

On 8 October 2005, the Slavic Center’s K-12 Outreach Team will host a Saturday workshop on “Teaching Russian Culture.” The workshop will be held at the Kuhn Honors and Scholars House at 220 W. 12th Ave and will last from 9am to 4pm.

Consisting of advanced graduate students from the OSU Slavic Dept, the K-12 Outreach Team will present teachers with exciting lessons covering such topics as everyday life and culture in Russia, Orthodox holidays, Russian films and cartoons, folk tales, arts and crafts, music, and food. The workshop will include seven contact hours of work for teacher certification requirements. Enrollment is limited. To register, please email csees@osu.edu and include your name, telephone, and school affiliation; also mail a $10 registration fee to the OSU Slavic Center, 303 Oxley Hall, 1712 Neil Ave., Columbus, OH 43210 (please make checks payable to “The Ohio State University”)

Assoc. for the Study of Eastern Christianity & Culture to Hold Conference at OSU

ASEC, which became formally incorporated this summer, is holding its first conference on October 21–22, thanks to the support of the Center for Slavic and East European Studies and the Resource Center for Medieval Slavic Studies at The Ohio State University. The conference will be held at the Holiday Inn on the Lane in Columbus.

ASEC is honored to have Prof. Warren Treadgold of St. Louis University as its keynote speaker for this event. Professor Treadgold’s talk, “The Formation of Byzantine Identity,” will take place Friday evening at 7:00 in Buckeye Rooms I and II. The keynote lecture is open to the public (see article right).

The conference offers eight panels on topics relating to Religious Identity in Eastern Christianity. Areas of investigation include literature, musicology, history, and theology and topics range from Medieval Rus’ and Imperial Russia, to the modern period in Russia, Greece, Ukraine, and the United States. Registration for the conference is $35. This fee will be waived for OSU students with a valid student ID.

Warren Treadgold to present October lecture on Byzantine Identity

On Friday, 21 October at 7pm in the Buckeye Room of the Holiday Inn on Lane Ave., the Resource Center for Medieval Slavic Studies, the Center for Slavic and East European Studies, and the Assoc. for the Study of Eastern Christianity will co-sponsor a lecture by historian Warren Treadgold of St. Louis University. Entitled "The Formation of a Byzantine Identity," the lecture is the keynote address of the 2005 Association for the Study of Church History & Culture Conference (see article p. 3) at OSU.

A Professor of Byzantine Studies at St. Louis University, Dr. Treadgold is author of numerous books and publications, including A Concise History of Byzantium (2001), A History of the Byzantine State and Society (1997), and The Byzantine Revival, 780-842 (1988).

This lecture is free and open to the public, and is the keynote lecture of the 2005 Association for the Study of Eastern Christianity Annual Conference, to be held on 21-22 October at the Holiday Inn on Lane Ave in Columbus. For more information contact csees@osu.edu or call 614-292-8770.

Cincinnati (June 15, 2005) – Experience selections from the Cincinnati Art Museum’s collection of Czech prints beginning June 18. “Strength and Will: Czech Prints from behind the Iron Curtain, a Gift of the Anne and Jacques Baruch Collection,” presents selections from one of the country’s largest collections of 20th century prints by Czech artists and highlights the work of 20 gifted artists who persisted in times of social upheaval and political turmoil when both their personal freedom and creativity were threatened.

“The 20 artists in this exhibition all have exceptional technical skills, both in printmaking and drawing,” said Kristin Spangenberg, curator of prints, drawings, and photographs for the Museum. “It is a testament to their creativity and resourcefulness that, while lacking basic materials, they found innovative ways to work.”

The exhibition features printmakers from Czechoslovakia who worked in cultural isolation, lacking official recognition and having limited opportunities to exhibit internally or study abroad prior to 1989, when student protests in Prague initiated the Velvet Revolution and ended communist control. Consequently, the Czechs are individualists whose works have an evocative content and technical quality. Their works span a wide variety of themes, from subjects with historical, literary, and musical references to fantasy with surrealist overtones and pure abstractions.

Today, Eastern printmakers display their work extensively throughout Europe. Yet they have received limited exposure in North America. In 1967, the Jacques Baruch Gallery opened in Chicago to bring the work of Eastern European artists before American audiences.

New Additions to CSEES Video Library

CSEES recently added a number of rare World War II-era documentaries to its Video Library. These documentaries were purchased from International Historic Films of Chicago and include Nazi and Soviet propaganda films shot between 1939 and 1943.

CSEES maintains a video library for educators, students, and civic/educational groups in Ohio. The library contains over 1,500 documentary and feature films in Bulgarian, English, Russian, Polish, Czech, Hungarian, Romanian, Serbo-Croatian, Slovak, Ukrainian, and Yiddish languages. Videos may be rented free of charge. (For more information, contact Maryann Keisel at 292-8770). The new World War II-era documentaries are as follows:

The Baltic Tragedy (DVD) Hitler’s war on Russia is graphically portrayed in 11 original German wartime newsreels featuring Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and Finland. 1943, 148 mins. English subs.

The German Invasion of Poland (DVD) The first German wartime newsreel of the 1939 invasion of Poland. Contains footage depicting a Polish artillery barrage against the German frontier town of Beuthen, SS troops attacking Danzig, and ferocious battle scenes from Radom and Kutno. 1939, 60 mins. English subs.

Our Russian Front (VHS) An extraordinary documentary of rare Soviet footage dealing with Russia’s preparation for war against the advancing German Army. 1941, 43 mins. English subs.

Russians at War (VHS) Action highlights of the 1942 Russian winter campaign. 1943, 60 mins. English narration.

The Soviet Paradise (VHS) A German propaganda film detailing conditions inside the “Soviet Paradise.” Soviet citizens are depicted visiting the Exhibit

The exhibition, spanning more than 50 years, is made possible by a major gift from the Anne and Jacques Baruch Collection of outstanding prints and drawings. It marks only the second time the Cincinnati Art Museum has presented a unique grouping of works from its now unparalleled collection of Czech prints.

“Seldom seen in North America, this remarkable exhibition presents a rare opportunity to view original prints by internationally renowned Czech artists from behind the Iron Curtain,” said Spangenberg.
Columbus Guitar Society, CSEES
To Host November Concert

The Columbus Guitar Society and the Center for Slavic and Eastern European Studies are collaborating to bring the guitar duo "The Czar's Guitars" to Columbus. The duo consists of Dr. Oleg Timofeyev and John Schneiderman playing historic Russian repertoire on historic Russian 7-string guitars, they specialize in period transcriptions of the music of Glinka.

Each performer has an extensive discography of solo recordings available via several prominent classical music labels. Also, Dr. Timofeyev is one of the leading scholars and champions in the rediscovery of Russian guitar music.

The concert is scheduled for 8 pm, 19 November 2005 at Capital University's Huntington Recital Hall http://www.capital.edu/vis/bexleyhall.htm. General admission is $15, $10 for students with ID or seniors, and FREE for OSU or Capital University students with ID.

Those interested in donating to the Slavic Center are invited to make tax-deductible contributions to account #307923 at the Development Office of the OSU Foundation.

Wexner Center Presents Fall Series on New Czech Cinema

Czechoslovakia (now the Czech Republic) has produced some of the world's great filmmakers, including Milos Forman, Jiri Menzel, and animator Jan Svankmajer. However, relatively few films from that nation receive distribution in the U.S. As a result, Czech cinema remains one of today's most underappreciated national cinemas. Beginning on Friday, 7 October the Wexner Center for the Arts (1871 N. High St.) will present a fall series of recent Czech films. The series includes some of the most successful and critically acclaimed Czech films on the festival circuit—most of them featuring the trademark Czech humor—from the past few years. The New Czech Cinema Series was organized by Irena Kovarova in cooperation with the Czech Film Center, Prague. Tickets: $6; $4 students, Wexner members. For more information, visit www.wexarts.org or call 292-0330.

Year of the Devil (2002) 7pm
Wild Bees (2001) 8:40pm

Often referred to as the Czech This is Spinal Tap, Year of the Devil (88 mins.) features a folk music star, a band of funeral musicians, and a Dutch filmmaker who join forces and stumble toward individual enlightenment on a magical musical adventure. Set in a small impoverished country village, Wild Bees (94 mins.) is a biting comedy about an idealistic young forest worker who pines for the salesgirl at the local grocery store while she endures an empty relationship with her boyfriend, a “Billie Jean”–era Michael Jackson wannabe. The film is reminiscent of the Czech New Wave of the 1960s in its bittersweet portrayal of life in the countryside.

One Hand Can’t Clap (2003) 7pm
Return of the Idiot (1999) 8:50pm

In One Hand Can’t Clap (100 mins.), Czech actor/rock star Jiri Machácek plays Standa, a luckless ex-con who wants to turn his life around after being released from prison. His former boss owes him money, and the future looks bright until Standa hooks up with someone who is an even bigger loser than himself. Loosely inspired by Dostoevsky’s The Idiot, Return of the Idiot (99 mins.) features a young man who is released into the world after being institutionalized his entire life.

Loners (David Ondricek, 2000) 7pm
Brats (Zdenek Tyc, 2002) 8:55pm

A story of disaffected youth in Prague, Loners (104 mins.) was a huge hit among young Czechs upon its release, largely because of its popular soundtrack. Starring Jiri Machácek, this comedy follows the interconnected lives of seven young adults as they try to escape their loneliness by forging serious relationships. In Brats (96 mins.), a couple moves from Prague to the countryside in hopes of finding a better environment for their two adopted Romany sons. Their dream is shattered when an elderly man accuses one of the sons of shattering his windshield, stirring the prejudices of the couple’s new neighbors.
In August, Bojan Belic (DSEELL) defended his dissertation "Complement Verb Variation in Present-Day Serbian," under the mentorship of Professor Brian D. Joseph. In the Fall he will begin working as a lecturer in the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures at the University of Washington in Seattle.

In June, Yuliya Bezugla (DSEELL) received her M.A. in Russian linguistics. During the summer quarter she also taught second and third-year Russian at the R&EE Summer Language Institute at the Univ. of Iowa Press.

In Spring 2005, Alan Beyerchen (History) presented a paper entitled “Clausewitz and the Nonlinear Nature of War” at Oxford Univ. at a conference sponsored by the Leverhulme Programme on the Changing Character of War. He also delivered the 2005 Hillard Gold ’39 Endowed Lecture at UNC-Chapel Hill on “Heisenberg and the German Physics Community Under the Third Reich.”

Joe Brandesky (Theatre, OSU-Lima) spent the first part of the summer adapting Czech writer Karel Jaromir Erben’s tale The Three Spinners for the OSU-Lima Theatre for Young Audiences AU 05 production. He also continued with preparation for his forthcoming book 20th Century Czech Scene Design for the Theatre and Culture series published by the U. of Iowa Press.

Angela Brintlinger (DSEELL) has been named Assistant Prose Editor at The Antioch Review.

Mary Cavender (History, OSU-Mansfield Campus) presented “Nobilwomen’s Use of Gendered Language in Financial and Legal Appeals, Russia 1820-1860” in June at the Berkshire Conference. She is completing work on her book manuscript, “Nests of the Gentry,” which examines the domestic ideals and local commitments of the provincial gentry in Tver province from 1820-60.

Victoria Clement (History) was recently named a Postdoctoral Teaching and Research Associate in Central Asia/Caucasus Studies at the Russian, East European and Eurasian Studies Center, at the Univ. of Illinois.

Keith Culbertson (CSEES) and Yevgeniya Tyurikova (DSEELL) recently co-authored an article entitled “Hidden Treasures: Slavic Manuscript No. 15 of the Hilandar Research Library” for the journal Palaeobulgarea XXX2 (2005).

Stephen Dale (History) will be conducting research in Chinese Central Asia this fall on the embassies between the Ming and Timurid courts of Samarqand and Herat in the early fifteenth century.

In July, Carol Fink (History) presented a paper entitled "Minority Protection and the League of Nations, 1920-1939," at the International Congress of Historical Sciences in Sydney, Australia, where she also chaired the panel “1956: The Global Dimension.” In August, she also conducted research on the topic West Germany and Israel, 1969-1974, at the Israel State Archives in Jerusalem.

Don Hempsom (History) participated in the 18th Annual Junior Scholars’ Training Seminar co-sponsored by East European Studies at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars and the American Council of Learned Societies. The four day seminar, hosted in mid-August, allowed a select and multi-disciplinary group of junior scholars to present their research to distinguished senior scholars in the field of East European Studies.

In July, Ludmila Isurin (DSEELL) presented a paper "My apartment is 32 square meters: Narrative strategies of Russian-English Bilinguals" at the 14th World Congress of Applied Linguistics in Madison, Wisconsin. The paper was part of the panel "Russian in Diaspora," which is also the title of a graduate seminar she is planning for Winter 2006.

In summer 2005, CSEES M.A. student Catherine Chapman traveled to Vladivostok, Russia where she undertook a 2-month internship at that city’s U.S. Consulate. Below Catherine offers a brief review of her experiences...

“Oh, the weather will get better I promise,” one Foreign Service National told me. But after being in Vladivostok, Russia for almost two months and having only seen the sun six times, I didn’t put much faith in her weather prediction. The weather went from one extreme to another, from typhoon force rains to humidity high enough to cause you to break into a sweat as soon as you stepped from your air-conditioned office. Or my favorite, a fog that sets in so quickly that one minute you can see all the way to the harbor and the next you cannot see five feet in front of you. But the drastic changes in weather are not the only Russian characteristics that Vladivostok holds. Although located in northeast Asia, Vladivostok is very much a Russian city, with its Khrushchev era apartment buildings and babushkas selling plants and sunflower seeds on street corners.

The purpose of my visit to Vladivostok was an internship with the Department of State at the U.S. consulate there. At the Consulate I worked in both the Political/Econ and Public Affairs offices. I worked on various projects such as helping put together reports on the Russian Far East fishing industry and regional security cooperation in northeast Asia, creating databases for Consulate contacts, along being the general “will you check my English” person.

While lacking the cultural diversions of Moscow or St. Petersburg, Vladivostok made up for it with curiosity. The Russians here are very excited to meet foreigners since Vladivostok had been a closed city until 1992 and they did not often hear a foreign accent. I was invited to speak at a University about attending college in the United States and was, for most of the students, the only foreigner they had ever spoken to, and definitely the only American.

Most Russians would ask “Why Vladivostok?” and when I told them I had no choice they shook their head knowingly as if to say of course that would be the only reason someone would want to be here. Granted, Vladivostok would not be my first choice of Russian cities to live in and work in; it nonetheless provided me a valuable life experience. And how often do you really get to say that you lived in the Russian Far East?
CSEES Welcomes Six New Students for 2005-06

The OSU Slavic Center is pleased to announce the addition of six new students to its Russian and East European Studies M.A. program. Founded in 1991, the Slavic Center M.A. program offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of Russia, Central Asia, the Caucasus, and the countries of Eastern Europe and is intended for students interested in pursuing careers in government, the military, academia, and the business and non-profit sectors. CSEEC wishes its new students the best of luck in 2005-06!

David Ratcliff is a graduate of OSU, where he majored in International Studies with a concentration in Slavic and Eastern Europe and studied the Serbian language. In 2003, David attended the Azbukum Center for Serbian Language and Culture in Belgrade, Serbia-Montenegro.

Katherine Scodova is a graduate of Oberlin College in Ohio where she majored in Russian and East European Studies. Katherine earned fellowships to work and live in both Kazakhstan and Moscow along with studying abroad in Krasnodar, Russia.

Faculty/Student News (cont’d)

In summer 2005, Tanya Ivanova-Sullivan (DSEELL) successfully defended a dissertation entitled “Lexical Variation in the Slavonic Thekara Texts: Semantic and Pragmatic Factors in Medieval Translation Praxis.”

Ilse Lehiste (Linguistics) attended the 10th Int’l Congress of Finno-Ugricists, held 15-21 August in Yoshkar Ola, Russia. She co-authored the paper “Mari Prosody,” presented there by a colleague from Tartu U. (Dr. Pire Teras). The study is part of a larger project in Uralic prosody, initiated by Dr. Lehiste 6 years ago. The first book that has resulted from the project (Erzya Prosody) was published in 2003; the next book, Mari Prosody, is in preparation.

In May-June 2005, Allan E. Lines (Agr., Envr. & Devel. Econ) served as a project evaluator for the Western Illinois University / Ryazan Sate Agrarian Academy Global Business Learning Partnership program in Ryazan, Russia.

In May, Predrag Matejic (Hilandar) received and honorary doctorate from the University of Veliko Turnovo, Bulgaria.

David McVey (CSEES) attended the Eighth Annual World Congress of Rusyns in Krynica, Poland, in June. He also watched a portion of the Rusyn Youth Conference, where a representative from the United States was assigned to the council for the first time.

Terry Studer is a graduate of Defiance College in Defiance, Ohio where he majored in History and Psychology. Through Defiance College, Terry traveled to several countries in both Eastern and Western Europe which triggered his interest in Slavic and Eastern European studies.

Allison Szabo is a graduate from University of Pittsburgh where she received a B.A. in Anthropology. Allison plans on continuing her education and to receive a PhD after her studies at OSU.

Amy Szabo is a graduate from Oklahoma State University where she received a BA in English. Amy recently spent over a year living in Budapest, Hungary and Athens, Greece.

Nathan Weller is a graduate of Otterbein College in Westerville, Ohio where he received a Bachelor’s of Arts degree in History. A former intern at CSEES, Nathan is interested in the history of former Yugoslavia and the Balkan region in general.

Scott David Orr (Poli-Sci) graduated with his Ph.D. in June and is now an Associate Lecturer in the Political Science department at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

Scott Pearson (Agr., Envr. & Devel. Econ) spent the summer working and conducting research at InvestCredit, a microfinance agency in Chisinau, Moldova.

Helene Senecal (Hilandar) was recently named a 2004-05 recipient of the Dean’s Outstanding Staff Member Award.

New Security and Intelligence Major Approved for Undergraduates

COLUMBUS – The Ohio State University is responding to the challenges facing the nation by offering a new Security and Intelligence major for undergraduates.

The major was developed to meet the demands of students and faculty who are interested in making contributions toward improving the nation’s security and intelligence services, said Tony Mughan, director of International Studies. The 9/11 attacks forced the United States to extend its traditional focus on protecting its interests abroad to include combating terrorist organizations intent on attacking targets in the United States. The shift requires students and intelligence and public safety officials to learn about new issues involving national and personal security, and the major will help to fulfill that need, he said.

“The interdisciplinary major includes courses on terror and terrorism, development and control of weapons of mass destruction, food security and globalization, code-breaking, and international security. Housed in the Undergraduate International Studies Program in the Colleges of the Arts and Sciences, the major comprises courses from approximately 14 colleges and academic departments. In addition, the major requires students to learn a foreign language.

“We want the students to better understand the threat and the terrorists’ psyche: how they organize and operate and how they analyze the strengths and weaknesses of our intelligence agencies,” Mughan said. “Prior to 9/11, homeland security was a relatively minor topic because no one really thought that anyone would attack the United States. People believed that once the Cold War was over, the risk of external attack was over,” he said. “The United States now has to protect itself not only against traditional enemies, but also from those who are much more difficult to identify, locate and protect ourselves from.” Mughan said the major will continue expanding its course offerings. Courses are now being developed on the economics of war, environmental security, language and computers, rebuilding failed states, and terrorism and violence.

Karlene Foster, assistant director of International Studies, said some of the courses in the Security and Intelligence major were first created for the former National Security Policy major, also in International Studies, which focused on issues of security in the Cold War period.

“The new specialization expanded on what we already had in place. The great thing is that some of the coursework is still being offered at Ohio State, so we didn’t have to create everything,” she said. Foster said students who have expressed an interest in the major include those who are pursuing careers in intelligence or public safety, former members of the military ROTC students. In addition, she said international students are interested in taking the major, too. “The 9/11 attacks also scared a lot of people outside the United States,” Foster said. “Many international students are interested in studying this area, and then plan to go home to work in homeland security in their own countries.”

With the major and coursework in place, Mughan said the university may eventually offer graduate-level courses, as well as professional development opportunities for public safety officials and first responders. Because of its size and breadth of resources, Ohio State can offer an unusual range and wealth of expertise to various constituencies.

“The university can help through its primary function of analyzing and understanding the threats, and in a practical way of preparing the community on how to respond to such attacks,” Mughan said. “Ohio State has such a wide range of expertise in these areas that we have the ability to offer comprehensive programs and courses. We are really in a strong position of offering a truly multidisciplinary perspective on homeland security.”

Translation Conference (cont’d)

and Cold War politics; translation and exile; Eastern European contributions to translation theory; translation and the construction of national languages and literatures; translating gender, sexual, and ethnic identities; translation as metaphor and/or theme; re-translation, pseudo-translation, meta-translation; translation and film; as well as isolated problems involved with linguistic and cultural transfer.

The conference will begin on Friday with a workshop on literary translation led by the translator Marian Schwartz. The workshop will be followed by a keynote lecture by Clare Cavanagh, a noted translator and scholar from Northwestern University. On Saturday, in addition to a full schedule of panels, there will be a keynote lecture given by Peeter Torop, a translation scholar and semiotician from the University of Tartu, Estonia, whose talk will deal with the relationship between semiotics and translation theory. On Sunday, following the morning panels, noted musicologist, Harlow Robinson of Northeastern University will discuss the translation of Russian opera, and JR Fralick, Chair of the voice department at Baldwin Wallace College, will perform a selection of Dr. Robinson’s translations. Following Sunday’s keynote, there will be a reading of translated literature hosted by Bill Johnston, Director of the Polish Studies Center at Indiana University at Bloomington, that will celebrate the very challenging art of literary translation.

The conference “Translating Eastern Europe: Art, Identity, and Politics in Translated Literature” will be held at the Blackwell Hotel on 2110 Tuttle Park Place from Friday, 30 Sept. to Sunday, 2 October 2005. For a schedule of speakers visit: http://appling.kent.edu/translatingeasterneurope/
OSU Faculty, Graduate Students attend VII World Congress of the International Council for Central and East European Studies

On 25-30 July scholars from all over the world met for the International Council for Central and East European Studies (ICCEES) congress held in Berlin at the Humboldt University. Such congresses take place every five years under the auspices of several national scholarly associations, among them also the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies (AAASS), which is one of the founding members of ICCEES. The purpose of the meeting is to not only to exchange information among the research centers and scholars from various countries and disciplines, but also to compare ways of thinking and approaches which differ from country to country.

The location of the Congress in Berlin was particularly conducive to the interaction between the scholars from East and West—especially appropriate for this year’s theme of the Congress, which was “Europe—Our Common Home?” Some 1,500 participants, among them several from Ohio, participated in the meeting, which was opened with festive addresses celebrating the entry of several Eastern European countries into the European Union. Poland’s president Aleksander Kwasniewski was the keynote speaker.

OSU was represented by papers given by the faculty members: Ted Hopf, Political Science, Irene Masing-Delic, DSEELL, Myroslava Mudrak, Art, and Halina Stephan, DSEELL. Two of our graduate students, Inna Caron, and Mark Nuckols, both from DSEELL, also presented their research. Other Ohio colleagues attending the Congress were Tim Scholl from Oberlin College, Brian Baer from Kent State University, and Dan Rowney from Bowling Green University.

South Slavic History and Culture
A Fall Series of Croatian, Macedonian, Serbian, and former Yugoslav Films

3 October
Zona Zamfirova
Serbian, 2002
This film, a touching romance between a goldsmith named Mane and a famous wealthy man’s daughter Zona, is a most ambitious Yugoslavian project. The story is set in old Nis at the end of 19th Century. Unique southern spirit and music, old dialect, national costumes, and habits have been revived to create a beautiful offering of local color and a rare glimpse into long-standing traditions. (104 mins., in Serbian with English subtitles.)

7 November
Fine Dead Girls
Croatian, 2002
Iva and Maria are two young lesbians who decide to rent an apartment together. All sorts of seedy characters live in their apartment block, including a hooker, a former soldier, a young man who hangs out with skinheads, and an old man who hides the fact that his wife has died in order to keep collecting her pension. The couple’s problems begin when their neighbors realize that they are lesbians and worsen when a neighbor falls in love with Iva and has trouble accepting her sexual orientation. (77 mins., in Croatian with English subtitles.)

21 November
Život je čudo
Serbian, 2004
What could be better for the village than a scenic railway to bring in the tourists? What could be worse for tourism than war? Luka builds the railway and shuts his eyes to war. Then Luka’s wife runs off with a musician and his son is called up to the army. Luka’s life is a war zone. Then he meets Sabaha… (1.55 mins., in Serbian only. No subtitles.)

5 December
Kad porastem bici kengur
Serbian, 2004
Kad porastem consists of three Belgrade stories. In the first, a man named Braca tries to pick up Iris, a model from the city centre. In the second, Somi and Duje bet on a London football club where their school friend is the goalkeeper. And in the third story, Avaks and Hibrid spend their day killing time on the roof of their apartment building waiting for something to happen. This is a story about young people at the point when their youth runs out and they haven’t achieved anything in their lives. They are waiting for something to wrest them out of their torpor, without realizing that life and spiritual well-being are not things which come as a gift but are something which must be worked at. (100 mins., in Serbian with English subtitles.)

10 October
Who’s Singin’ Over There?
Yugoslavian, 1980
In April 1941, men on a country road board Krstic’s bus for Belgrade: two Gypsies who occasionally sing about misery, an aging war vet, a Nazi sympathizer, a dapper singer, a consumptive, and a man with a shotgun. Along the way, misadventure strikes: a flat tire, a rickety bridge, a farmer who’s plowed the road, a funeral, an army detail, and a lost wallet slow the bus and expose rifts among the travelers. (86 mins., in Serbian with English subtitles.)

28 November
While Father was Away on Business
Yugoslavian, 1985
Tito’s break-up with Stalin in 1948 marked the beginning of not only confusing, but also very dangerous years for many hard-core Yugoslav communists. A careless remark about a newspaper cartoon is enough for Mesha to join many arrested unfortunates. The story is told from the perspective of Malik, his young son who believes his father was “away on business”. (136 mins., in Serbo-Croatian with English subtitles.)

31 October
Before the Rain
Macedonian, 1994
A haunting study of war and its tragic consequences -- especially when the fighting occurs between neighbors. Divided into 3 sections, the connection between disparate events only becomes clear at the film’s end. In “Words,” a Macedonian monk breaks his vows in order to hide an Albanian girl accused of murder. “Faces” dramatizes an Englishwoman’s struggle to choose between her husband and her lover, a Macedonian war photographer. And “Pictures” follows the photographer as he tries to comprehend the bloodshed that has so transformed his nation’s landscape. (113 mins., in Macedonian with English subtitles.)

FIlms are shown Mondays at 7:30 pm in 180 Hagerty Hall and are free and open to the public
