Globalization and free trade in the 21st century have led to epidemic levels of trafficking in people for the purpose of forced prostitution and other labor. Trafficking in people is estimated to be a $15 billion industry, second only to the illegal drug trade. It is also estimated that worldwide approximately 700,000 people are trafficked annually. Obviously a human rights violation, trafficking is also a health issue, a socioeconomic issue, and a transnational crime. The UN has created strategies toward the prevention of trafficking, the success of which remains to be evaluated.

On May 14-16, 2004, the Mershon Center, the Center for Slavic and East European Studies, the Office of International Affairs, and the Department of Slavic and East European Languages and Literatures are pleased to present the conference “The Dark Side of Globalization: Trafficking in People.” The three day conference will bring speakers from seven countries together to address the efforts being made in the interest of deterring and preventing the horrific practice of the international trafficking in women and children. Most of the speakers are currently involved with organizations which aid persons who have fallen victim to the traffickers, helping them to regain legal status, to find a means to support themselves, and...
May 1, 2004 will become a major date in the history of our region. On that day, eight former Soviet bloc countries, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Slovenia, Hungary, Poland, Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, will join the European Union. Even though those countries, initially enthusiastic, are now apprehensive about their future economic and political adjustments, the event in itself is epoch-making. It promises to speed up the economic and administrative integration of these countries and furthers the sense of their common cultural framework. The concept of an East Europe, which is a part of the name of our Center, begins to lose its validity, and we need to be prepared to redefine ourselves as well as our mission.

This quarter we have scheduled two major events: a conference on trafficking in people for the purpose of forced labor including prostitution, especially women from Eastern Europe, and a symposium on the interaction between the American and the Russian culture. We are also offering a series of lectures on Central Asia and several showings of Russian war films. The folk music concert of “Zolotoj Plyos,” held at the beginning of the quarter, enjoyed great attendance.

The Midwest Slavic Conference, held at OSU in March, was so well received that we have decided to hold the subsequent two conferences on the OSU campus using the funding of our current Title VI grant. We are exploring the possibility of scheduling the Midwest Slavic Conference concurrently with the Midwest Russian History Workshop and perhaps also together with the Conference on Southeast Slavic Studies. Additionally, we would like to add undergraduate panels that could bring together undergraduates from various Ohio colleges and universities who have authored interesting course papers, providing valuable experience for potential future Slavists. Slavic studies faculty and graduate assistants are asked to look for such papers in their undergraduate classes and to encourage the students to participate in the conference.

The Slavic Center would also like to congratulate our eighteen recipients of the FLAS grants for 2004-5. We hope they will be able to apply the language expertise that they will be acquiring thanks to the U.S. Department of Education grants in their future professional careers.

We would like to announce two visitors currently teaching at OSU. Dr. Kamoludin Abdullaev, a historian from Tajikistan, is spending his second quarter here teaching courses on Central Asia in the International Studies Program and in the Political Science Department. Dr. Tamas Reti, an economist from Hungary, is lecturing on the economic issues of the region and offering courses in the Departments of Economics and International Studies.

As the academic year is coming to the end, we would like to thank all those who have helped in the work of the Slavic Center. Graduate students, Anna Goben and Keith Culbertson, are very effective aides as is Susmita Sundaram, our K-12 outreach coordinator. We also get cheerful assistance from our undergraduate helpers, Mike Marshall, Paul de Los Santos, and Jennifer Pierpont.

We are grateful to the Slavic Department graduate students and faculty for their generous assistance in putting together the Midwest Slavic Conference. And we are looking forward to hearing suggestions for the 2004-2005 activities programming for our region!
The conference will begin Friday evening with keynote speaker Maria Tchomarova and a film. Ms. Tchomarova, head of the Animus Association, will be speaking about the efforts of her organization in Bulgaria and about the East European trafficking situation in general. Saturday and Sunday, panels of speakers will discuss efforts in India, the Czech Republic, the Netherlands, Great Britain, and the United States of America. Speakers come from a broad range of experience, including academics, lawyers, and social workers, and represent the work of organizations such as the Poppy Project, La Strada, the Animus Association, and Stop-Traffic.

CSEES is proud to announce that this year’s Midwest Slavic Conference was a resounding success. Sponsored by CSEES and the Midwest Slavic Association, the conference took place on 26-28 February at the Blackwell Hotel and Conference Center on the campus of OSU and featured 31 separate panels with over 300 participants. According to Midwest Slavic Association president, George Kalbouss, “We expected a decent turnout, but this year’s conference was one of the best we’ve ever had. Hopefully we can continue our relationship with the OSU Slavic Center and host the Midwest Slavic Conference here in Columbus on a annual basis.”

The conference began on Thursday, 26 February with a keynote lecture by Russian legal analyst Alexander N. Domrin. A visiting professor of law at the University of Iowa, Domrin is currently a Senior Research Fellow at the Institute for Legislation and Comparative Law in Moscow, a research and legislation-drafting division of the Russian government. His keynote lecture, entitled “Russia’s Elections and Prospects for Russian Development,” drew an audience of 80 people.

The lecture was followed by a wine-and-cheese reception at the Blackwell, after which time attendees traveled by bus to the Drake Union for a performance of Pentecost. Written by British playwright David Edgar, Pentecost is an East European-themed play co-sponsored by CSEES and the OSU Dept. of Theater.

OSU to Host May Conference on Trafficking in People (cont’d from p.1)

On Friday and Saturday, 27-28 February, panel presentations took place covering almost all aspects of Slavic studies. Participants included business and community leaders, diplomats, military officers, graduate students and professors. Also in attendance were 10 visiting journalists from Ukraine, who came to the Midwest Slavic Conference through the support of the International Visitors’ Council of Columbus. This year’s most popular panels included “Ethnic Heritage Associations in Ohio,” “Medieval Slavic Philology,” and the “Chekhov Centennial Panel, as well as “Historical Aspects of Hungary’s 1956 Revolution” and “Doing Business with Russia.”

CSEES and the Midwest Slavic Association wish to thank all of the conference participants and attendees, with special thanks to Anna Goben, Keith Culbertson, Maryann Keisel, Luke Wochensky, Susmita Sundaram, Inna Caron, Predrag Matejic, Irene Delic, and Dan Collins. See you next year!!

News from the Hilandar Research Library

Early March 4 a devastating fire broke out at Hilandar Monastery on Mount Athos (Greece). Fully one-half to two-thirds of the 800-year-old Serbian monastery was gutted. Lost were the renovated guest quarters, the recently renovated monks' quarters, 6 chapels, the entrance area and archway, dining areas, and much, much more, including portions of the monastery that dated back to the late 12th century. The cause of the fire has not yet been determined with any certainty. At least two commissions are investigating and determining what can be done to rebuild (restore).

As word of this catastrophe spread, many recalled that the Hilandar Research Library here at OSU originally began as a preservation project to microfilm the Slavic manuscripts of Hilandar Monastery. Among the sections of Hilandar Monastery lost to the recent fire were those where the actual microfilming took place between 1970 and 1975. Fortunately, the fire stopped at the walls of Hilandar Monastery's library, and the manuscripts themselves were untouched. Among the many slides of the interiors of Hilandar Monastery that are in the OSU Hilandar Research Library collection, however, are those that show what has now been lost forever.

Located in the OSU Main Library, The Hilandar Research Library has the largest collection of medieval Slavic manuscripts on microform in the world. For more information, visit: http://cmrs.osu.edu/rcmss/of its unanimous approval by the House last October, growing criticism may slow its progress through the Senate.

The bill is part of a larger renewal of the Higher Education Act of 1965, which is done every five to six years. Under Title VI, the program offers competitive grants averaging about $250,000 to area studies programs at schools like Columbia, Brigham Young, Georgetown, and Michigan State University, with many receiving multiple awards. Mr. Hoekstra's changes would let the government keep closer track of how this money is being spent.

The bill's most controversial provision would create a seven-member international advisory board to report to the Secretary of Education on how effectively international studies programs are meeting national needs and to make funding recommendations based on their findings. Two members of the Board would be appointed by the Senate, two by the House, and three by the secretary of Education, two of which would come from government agencies with security responsibilities. Other members would include politicians, representatives of cultural and educational organizations, and private citizens.

For the bill's supporters, it's entirely logical for the government to want to ensure a return on its investment. But critics worry that a board heavier on legislators and security experts than on academics might lack respect for both academic integrity and freedom.

By Kimberly Chase  Contributor to The Christian Science Monitor  (March 11, 2004)

NEW YORK - As in many college departments, intellectual independence is a theme at Columbia's Department of Middle East and Asian Languages and Cultures.

An office door is decorated with a sticker that reads "Subvert the dominant paradigm," and the topics of faculty-authored books on display range from Iranian cinema to Israeli literature. But some academics worry this independence may be at risk as legislation increasing oversight of international studies programs makes its way through Congress.

The bill, called the International Studies Higher Education Act (HR 3077), reauthorizes about $80 million in funding for international and foreign language study, but with a twist - now the government would allocate more resources to programs that emphasize national security.

Proponents of the bill say that the reauthorization is routine and the new focus is key to enhancing government intelligence capabilities. But academics are up in arms over what they see as possible infringement on academic freedom.

"I feel that it is a very dangerous precedent to get any intellectual enterprise under supervision by any ideological or government agency," says Professor George Saliba, Director of Graduate Studies at Columbia's MEALAC. "No matter how well-meaning and patriotic and benign and all of that, it inevitably will have repercussions on the freedom of speech, on the free flow of information, and on the way research is done."

If approved, the bill could have significant impact on international studies. Programs that do not prepare students for careers in national security would clearly be disadvantaged in the competition for federal funding.

The language of the bill is vague, however, when it comes to assessing the importance of different departments.

Some argue that those producing the largest number of students going into security-related professions would - and should - be favored. But others are concerned that the views of professors might also be weighed, allowing the government to cut off funding to departments that voice disagreement with its policies.

Critics worry that this could ultimately create a form of post-9/11 McCarthyism, endangering the atmosphere of critical thought that universities make possible.

Rep. Peter Hoekstra (R) of Michigan, who authored the bill as Chairman of the House Subcommittee on Select Education, says the bill has been misinterpreted. And now, in spite
Balkan Medievalist John Fine to Lecture at OSU

The third and final Lecture in the 2003-2004 Byzantino-Slavic Lecture Series, "Identities in the Medieval Balkans," is scheduled for Thursday, May 20, 2004 (7pm Jennings Hall, room 100, 1735 Neil Avenue OSU Campus). John V. A. Fine, Jr., professor of History at the University of Michigan (Ann Arbor), will lecture on questions of identity and ethnicity among the South Slavs, with particular emphasis on the Serbs and Bulgarians. Professor Fine has authored numerous books and articles, including The Bosnian Church: A New Interpretation - A Study of the Bosnian Church and Its Place in State and Society from the 13th to the 15th Centuries (1975), The Early Medieval Balkans: A Critical Survey from the Sixth to the Later Twelfth Century (1983), and The Late Medieval Balkans: A Critical Survey from the Late Twelfth Century to the Ottoman Conquest (1987). He also co-authored Bosnia and Herzegovina: A Tradition Betrayed (1994). His interest in the Byzantine Empire and the Balkans, as reflected in his scholarly work and in the courses he teaches, extends from early Byzantium to the present-day Balkans.

The 2003-2004 lectures, "Identities in the Medieval Balkans," illustrate the factors that shaped the origin, success, and failure of nationalities and minorities, and the historical circumstances that determined their disappearance or flourishing. The goal of this series, in effect, is to illuminate what makes a political, cultural, or religious identity viable and even popular in one age and not in another.

The Byzantino-Slavic Lecture Series is co-sponsored by the Center for Slavic and East European Studies, the Resource Center for Medieval Slavic Studies, the Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies, the Departments of Slavic and East European Languages and Literatures, History, Greek and Latin, the Modern Greek Program, and the Hilandar Research Library. Please contact the RCMSS at (614) 292-0634 or hilandar@osu.edu for information regarding the definitive time and place of Dr. Fine's lecture. This lecture is open to the public.

CSEES co-sponsors 3rd Annual “Global Hotspots” Workshop

The Center for Slavic and East European Studies, in conjunction with the other area studies centers at OSU, recently held a 5-week social studies workshop for P-12 teachers from the Central Ohio area. Entitled “Global Hotspots,” the purpose of the workshop was to provide teachers with background materials and information on events and issues currently in the news. Representing CSEES at this year’s workshop was Asst. Director Jason Vuic, who presented a lecture entitled “Crime and Corruption in Today’s Balkans.” In all, some 40 Columbus-area teachers participated in the workshop, whose Thursday night programs involved a 60-minute lecture, a dinner of regional food, then group work to develop lesson plans and teaching ideas for the classroom.

On Friday, 1 April the OSU Slavic Center sponsored a musical performance by the Russian folk troupe Zolotoj Plyos. Formed in 1994 by Alexander Solovov, Elena Sadina and Serguei Gratchev, Zolotoj Plyos performed in Columbus during a seven university tour of the Midwest.

The group's repertoire comprised many songs from different regions of Russia. Members performed in authentic folk costumes and played numerous Russian traditional instruments, including the treshchetka, balalaika, garmoshka and lozhki. Zolotoj Plyos has performed on television and has given concerts in Russia, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg, Germany, Portugal and the United States. All three members of the group are graduates of the Higher Music School of Saratov and are currently students at the Jef Denyn Royal Carillon School of Mechelen, Belgium. They have received prizes in several folk music contests, as well as the first place in the first Russian Carillon Competition.

The Slavic Center wishes to express its sincere gratitude to Ms. Julia Mikhailova, a graduate student in the OSU Slavic Dept., for making this concert a success!!!
OSU-Newark to Host June Concert by Russian Band Bering Strait

On Friday, 4 June at 7:30pm, at the OSU Newark Campus will host one of the hottest groups in country music, Bering Strait. The pop-country group hit the music scene last year with its self-titled album “Bering Strait,” released by record company Universal South. The album garnered a Grammy nomination for Best Country Instrumental Performance. The group of six twenty-somethings have been together since they were 10 years old, growing up in Obinsk, Russia, located about 60 miles south of Moscow. Their obsession with country music began with the fall of Communism and the flood of American culture into the country.

Over the past year, the group has gained a following among country fans and the media appearing in USA Today, LA Times, and the New York Times as well as CNN, CMT, MTV and 60 Minutes. A documentary film titled, “The Ballad of Bering Strait” was released last year and chronicled the band’s journey from a classical music conservatory in Russia to the country music scene in Nashville. For more information, contact Teri Holder, Director of Marketing and Public Relations at 740-366-9420 or holder.20@osu.edu. The performance will be held on The Newark Campus under the outdoor Martha Grace Reese Amphitheatre.

The concerts are free and the public is encouraged to bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnics for a concert under the summer stars.

Arbitrator: Zherdev can stay in NHL

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) - In March, an arbitrator ruled that Columbus Blue Jackets forward Nikolai Zherdev can keep playing in the NHL and does not have to return to Russia. Zherdev's former club in Russia, CSKA Moscow, claimed he was still obligated to serve in the military there.

The fourth overall pick in the 2003 draft, Zherdev has played in 42 games for the Blue Jackets this season, scoring seven goals and adding 11 assists.

"This has been a difficult few months for Nikolai, but he is to be commended for the way he has handled everything," Columbus president and general manager Doug MacLean said.

Zherdev, 19, joined the Blue Jackets on Dec. 1 after leaving CSKA Moscow. Russian hockey officials protested, saying Zherdev was still under contract with CSKA Moscow and had military obligations.

Stephan Netzle of the Court of Arbitration for Sport ruled in Geneva that CSKA violated international hockey rules by trying to keep Zherdev in Russia after the Blue Jackets drafted him, the NHL said.

The claim that Zherdev had military obligations in Russia was unfounded because his conscription was in violation of Russian law, Netzle ruled.

Georgi Derluguian from the Sociology Department at Northwestern U. will speak on “Russia in the Global Spread of Anti-Americanism (Theses Towards a Rational Program of Study).” Dr. Derluguian has a doctorate in history from the Institute of Universal History of the Academy of Sciences of the U.S.R.R. and a Ph.D. in sociology from the State University of New York.

He has just published a book Bourdieu’s Secret Admirer in the Caucasus: A Sociological Biography in World-Systems Perspective.” His book Ichkeria: A World History is in press and he is completing a manuscript on Globalization of Post-Communist Corruption.

Vladislav Zubok, from the History Department at Temple University, will present a lecture entitled “America as the Big Other: Russian anti-Americanism as a historical and cultural phenomenon.” Dr. Zubok has a Ph.D. from the Institute for the U.S. and Canada Studies of the Academy of Sciences of the U.S.R.R. in Moscow. His area of specialization include Soviet/Russian Political and Social History, the Cold War, and the impact of wars and international conflicts on societies. His book Inside the Kremlin’s Cold War: From Stalin to Khrushchev (1996) has won the Lionel Gelber Prize as the best English-language book on international relations in 1996. He has been a frequent consultant and on-air commentator for PBS, CNN, and ABC television on matters pertaining to the Cold War.

Alexander Nevsky (1939)
Sergei Eisenstein's landmark tale of Russia thwarting the German invasion of the 13th century was wildly popular and quite intentional, given the prevailing Nazi geopolitical advancement and destruction at the time. It can still be viewed as a masterful use of imagery and music, with the Battle on the Ice sequence as the obvious highlight. A great score by Prokofiev was effectively integrated by the Russian filmmaker, but stands on its own merit as well. Subtitled in English

The Cranes are Flying (1957)
Set during World War II, The Cranes are Flying is the tragic story of youthful love shattered by war. Two young lovers, Boris and Veronica, are certain they will marry and live happily ever after. But Boris volunteers for the army. During the grim days that follow, Veronica’s parents are killed in an air raid, she moves in with Boris’ family, and is seduced by Boris’ cowardly cousin. Boris and Veronica, irrevocably separated, try to maintain the dream that someday they will be reunited. Subtitled in English

Come and See (1985)
A crowning achievement of 1980’s Soviet cinema, Elem Klimov’s Come and See is perhaps the ultimate WWII film. This savage and lyrical fever dream of death, rage and terror experienced through young eyes is a virtual primer for the subsequent, similarly psychedelic intensity of Terrence Malick’s The thin Red Line and Spielberg’s “Saving Private Ryan,” Klimov’s elegant, harrowing union of unflinching ferocity and dreamlike clarity moved “Empire of the Sun” author J.G. Ballard to declare Come And See the greatest war film ever made. Subtitled in English

Escape from Afghanistan (1994)
A violent and realistic look at the war between Russia and Afghanistan, Escape from Afghanistan concerns a Russian photojournalist and a doctor who are caught up in battle when a skirmish flares up while they are interviewing prisoners near the country’s border. As the madness escalates, the doctor tends to the wounded and the photojournalist captures unforgettable images with his camera. All the while, they must struggle to figure out who they can trust as they try to get out of the country. This film is in English

Prisoner of the Mountains (1997)
Set high in the imposing, isolated Caucasus mountains, where the 20th century meets ancient lifestyles, Sergei Bodrov’s drama of the Chechyn war finds two opposing cultures locked in conflict for so long that the reasons seem moot. Young Russian grunt Vanya and his jaded veteran Sergeant survive an ambush by Chechyn guerrillas and wind up hostages of a village elder, a war-weary widower who has lost almost everything to fighting and wants merely to swap them for his POW son. Subtitled in English

War (2002)
A British couple is kidnapped by Chechens for a ransom of a million pounds - a ransom that nobody is able to pay. The British man and the Russian are let go - the former is told to come up with the ransom while his girlfriend stays with Chechens, the latter is sent with a message to hurry up the exchange of a Russian officer for the imprisoned brother of the Chechen warlord. Naturally, there is not enough money to buy back the British girl and no will on the part of Russians to exchange or rescue the Russian officer - so these two who were let go get back to Chechnya on their own accord to settle the affair in the Brat-2 style. Subtitled in English

The US Government estimates 700,000 to 2 million women and children are trafficked across borders each year. This does not take into account those trafficked within a country nor does it include men. Trafficking is the fastest growing form of forced labor.
